Section 1: Context and Business Background Information

Shein is a Chinese global fast fashion brand that prides itself on its cheap prices and large quantity of designs. Shein was founded in 2008 in Nanjing China by Chris Xu. It became the world's largest fashion retailer as of 2022. However, as consumers grew to be more ethically conscious, Shein began to come under fire for their poor worker conditions and lack of quality control. As of current, Shein has continued to dominate the market despite the pushback, however the future of Shein and whether the damage to their reputation will catch up to them, remains uncertain.

The team had a profound interest in fashion and app development and decided to create a database system for Shein app that included but was not limited to entities such as users, orders, favorites, etc.

Section 2: Business Rules

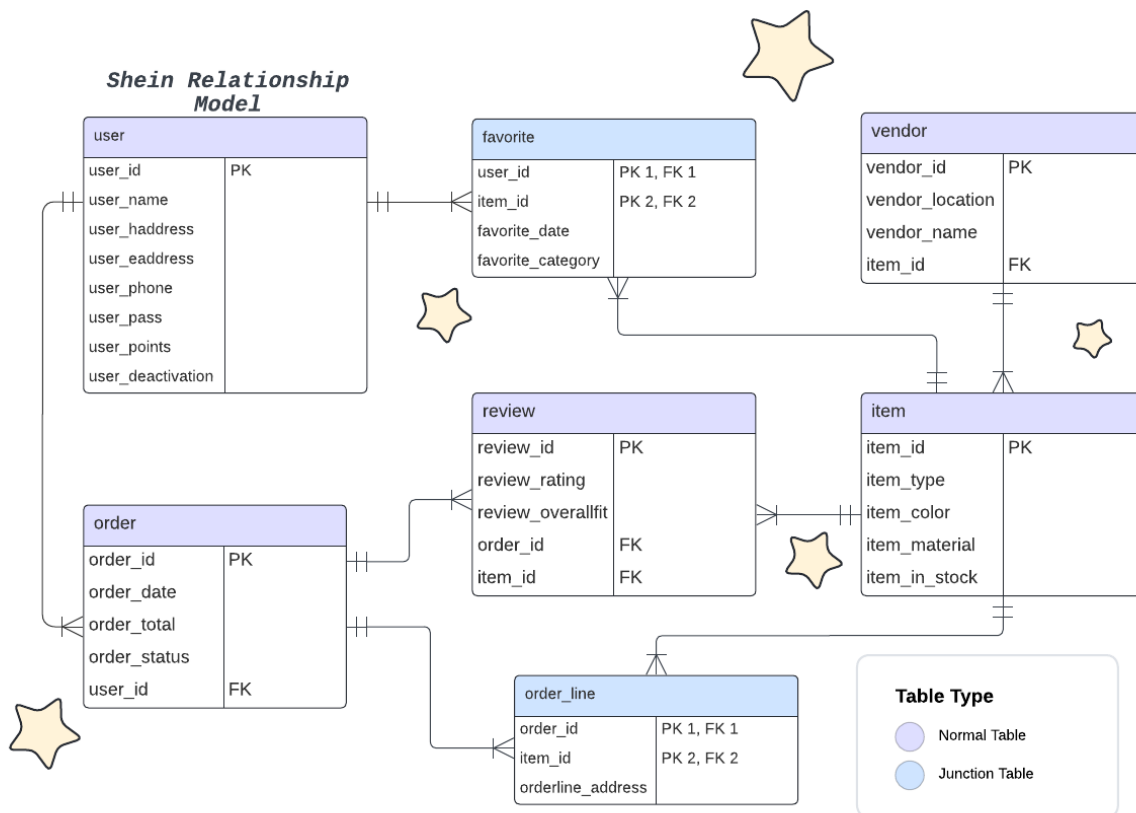

We have a total of 8 business rules which are listed below:

- A user can buy multiple items, and an item can be bought by multiple customers.
- A user has one account, and an account belongs to one user.
- An order is associated with one user who placed it and a user can place multiple orders.
- An item can be marked as a favorite by multiple users and a user can put multiple items on their favorites list.
- An item can have only one producer and producers can have multiple items.
- An order can have multiple items and products can have multiple orders.
- Each item can have multiple reviews, but each review can only have one item.

- Items are shipped from multiple destinations and destinations can have multiple items.

Section 3: Relational Model

We had 7 tables in total, including the necessary junction tables: user, order, review, item, vendor, favorite, and order_line.

Section 4: Database Tables

The database helps SHEIN manage its products, customers, vendors, and orders. We have created several tables in our database. Below are the screenshots of our tables.

Section 5: Code for Creation of Tables and Insertion of Data

CREATION:

Database –

```
create database mv30_sheinproject;
```

user table –

create table user(
    user_id varchar(20) not null unique,
    user_name varchar(35) not null,
    user_haddress varchar(35) not null,

Section 6: Relevant Queries

1. List the order whose order id is 00001.

select * from order_ where order_id = '00001';
```

2. Count the number of items for each material group.

```
select item_material, count(*) from item group by item_material;
```

3. List the names of vendors whose name starts with 'H'.

select * from vendor where vendor_name like 'H%';
```

4. List orders that were made after 2020.

select order_id, order_date, user_id from order_ where order_date > '2020-01-01';
```

5. List all active users on Shein.

select user_id, user_name, user_eaddress, user_phone, user_deactivation from user where user_deactivation = 'Active';

Section 7: Limitations and Scope for Extension

Due to the project's limited time and resources, the team limited the database to the functions of the app system of Shein. Additionally, some relationships between entities may have been simplified due to the time constraints of the project.

Other ways to extend the project included having entities such as individual warehouses to track the supply chain of the delivery. This includes extending the database to track its sourcing agents such as showing each of the individual warehouses and the production process. This would be a great addition since that would allow Shein to keep track of each individual item's whereabouts in the production-line. Also, another aspect that could have been added is mapping out the revenue streams of the production, shipping, and sale of items to keep track of how much money Shein had.
